ministration of the government.

On the 1st day of September, 1862, he was inaugurated at the city of Frankfort.

Previous to taking the oath of office, he delivered an address to the Legislature, in which he announced his policy, and to all of his constituents, without party distinctions. It is proposed in this number to call the attention of the country to the cardinal points of that address, and it will be beyond all cavil or dispute, that, while he was firm in his patriotic devotion to the Union, he was equally true to Kentucky and her legitimate rights, duties, and policy. Some extracts from that address will place the correctness of this assertion. "A departure from constitutional faith is the foundation of all the evils now upon us. How shall the Constitution-ab-solving Union-men, conservative men,

North and South, meet the issue presented by those who on the one hand seek by usurpation, to prevent the Constitution in its life, and, on the other, to throw its authorities, and, on the other, to destroy the Constitution and the Union by forceful revolution—the one in political, the other a warlike array? "We must meet them in the mode sanctioned by the Constitution. Through the ballot-box we must control legislation within just limits.

As to the judiciary, protect against the infliction of state violence of the Constitution, and, with the whole resources and military power of our Government, we must crush the rebellion and restore the national authority over the rebel States. This is the pledge of conservatism; this we must do, or our Government perishes, and with it the hope of free government forever."

At that period of the war there were omi-gins of a civil war, and the people of the majority in Congress, that attempt would be made by men to force terms of submission upon the acceptance of the rebellious States, destructive of their State rights and of their political equality.

These shadows of coming events soon merged into substantial actions. Governor Bramlette, in reluctant apprehension, that some such scheme were intended, he, in his address, in order to give encouragement to the conservative element of the country, takes the position "that we now have, and will have at the close of the rebellion, the identical Constitution which the extremists seek to destroy—the one by innovation, the other by force." "Rebellion has not altered or changed or modified either the Federal or State Constitutions. Nor has the rebellion destroyed the existence of the States as constituted by the Constitution, and it suspends the action of the civil government of the Federal Government within the rebel States pending the revolt, and substitutes the military authority until their rebellion ceases and they consent to accept the civil instead of the black, and believe that this Government was made for the white man, and that he ought to maintain and defend it; and we further believe that the large amounts expended to feed and support 'contrabands' are not a judicious use of the public treasure, but a wasteful and unprofitable expended in supporting the suffering widows and orphans left by our brave volunteers who have fallen in camp and field." "The vicious abolition of the Southern men, and the bigoted fanaticism of men of the North, in giving and accepting a sectional quarrel about a lot of property, and the enormous expense most groundless, cruel, wicked, increasing, and wherefore affected only people on the earth. The slave had no more necessary connection with this rebellion than the horse or any other species of property. But ambitious men of the South, who first sought to create a sectional division upon the tariff, in order to fill up a Government based upon the arbitrary will of a few men, and who filled by the incorrigible patriotism and adulation of all of Andrew Jackson, next gave and accept-

That able and influential conservative, the New York World, expresses opinion as to the course that President Wilson had better pursue hereafter, in the results of the late elections. It says, that, as the present Congress is the next will be, overwhelmingly radical, and as there is no hope of his being either to resist it or to change its character or its policy, he had better cease fighting with it and no longer make any opposition to the constitutional amendment it proposes.

For ourselves, we see no reason why President Wilson, as President, should alter his course of action on account of the late popular vote. It would be, under any circumstances, become the Chief Magistrate of the nation, engage himself in wrangles with Congress, and let his own duty to his country be sacrificed to the whims of a majority. But if he should do so, he would be the first President in the history of the United States who would have been elected by a majority of the people, and yet who would have been forced to change his course of action on account of the late popular vote.

Under the image of every object that a man sees is painted upon his eye in a reversed position, and all is brought right by the machinery of vision. Objects generally appear wrong-end up, and it is not until the eye is turned that they are seen as they really are. But the thing can be set right by no mechanism in nature.

Forsey says, that, if President Wilson is impeached, the result will be attended with "significant peace, security and harmony." Ah, the radicals may unchain the thunder, the whirlwind, the volcano and the earthquake, but they shall control the consequences? Not they.

Apples make good deserts, and no one who has seen the New York World thought that the apples should have its deserts. But can they serve deserts to distinguished guests a little more modestly?

Last Tuesday's political shower of cats, dogs, and pick-fractions, is expected to be followed to-morrow night by a shower of meteors.

During this year, the various countries of Europe imported from the United States 2,563,341 bales, and from other countries, the East Indies, Brazil, Egypt, and so forth, 771,000 bales, while the Northern States took 730,000 bales, and the South retained 120,000 bales for home consumption, making an aggregate of 4,064,341 bales, of which the South furnished 3,845,341. In the estimation of the Reviewer, the amount of stocks on hand at the beginning of the year was 1,500,000 bales, and at the end of the year, 1,250,000 bales, and the Northern States will take 1,250,000 bales, and the South retain 250,000 bales, leaving for Europe 4,000,000. "We have seen, since writing this," says the Reviewer in a footnote, "the statement of a Liverpool correspondent, that at the beginning of the year, the amount of stocks on hand at the end of the year, 1,250,000 bales, and the Northern States will take 1,250,000 bales, and the South retain 250,000 bales, leaving for Europe 4,000,000."

stated, be quadrupled in value, and, under the influence, the same principle will hold good in other cases." Is this it may, the price of cotton will advance. That much is certain—as certain as all events as cotton speculation ever got to be.

Under these circumstances, the Reviewer advises the Southern planter, where it is possible, by all means to "hold on to their crops" until the removal of the temporary causes which check the advance of the price, and "especially until the extravagant reports of the large crops to be raised by them during this season have been corrected abroad." He adds: "These reports have been industriously started and industriously propagated, from motives which are easily seen and understood. The game is being, adroitly and systematically played, with many odds against the producer, whose lot and vexation entitle him to the stakes, and unless he is wary they will be snatched from him. Where time necessity does not compel, let him rather prefer to count his bales than his greenbacks, until the prophecies time shall call for, and as sure as he lives he will reap a high reward for his delay. But if haste and hurry are to rule the market, it will become glutted, and he will get a mere pittance." This advice seems to an intelligent and wise.

Objects generally appear wrong-end up, and it is not until the eye is turned that they are seen as they really are. But the thing can be set right by no mechanism in nature.

During this year, the various countries of Europe imported from the United States 2,563,341 bales, and from other countries, the East Indies, Brazil, Egypt, and so forth, 771,000 bales, while the Northern States took 730,000 bales, and the South retained 120,000 bales for home consumption, making an aggregate of 4,064,341 bales, of which the South furnished 3,845,341. In the estimation of the Reviewer, the amount of stocks on hand at the beginning of the year was 1,500,000 bales, and at the end of the year, 1,250,000 bales, and the Northern States will take 1,250,000 bales, and the South retain 250,000 bales, leaving for Europe 4,000,000. "We have seen, since writing this," says the Reviewer in a footnote, "the statement of a Liverpool correspondent, that at the beginning of the year, the amount of stocks on hand at the end of the year, 1,250,000 bales, and the Northern States will take 1,250,000 bales, and the South retain 250,000 bales, leaving for Europe 4,000,000."
